NOT AN EDITORIAL

By Lynne Dokurno

In the last issue, we had announced that we will no longer be writing an editorial, as so many of them weren't actual editorials!! But now we have a decision to make. What should we do instead of an editorial? We've come up with a few different concepts including leaving the page for more great advertisers, adding another article, including recipes and remedies from long ago, and other thoughts as well. Over the next few issues, I'll be trying out some new ideas, and ask you to let us know what you think – send us an email to thewayback-times@gmail.com

Our first idea is vintage recipes, from parents, grandparents, great grandparents and even further back. Would you like to see tried and true recipes that don't mention gluten? Here's one of my favourite old recipes with no calorie count or macros included.

Cinnamon Rolls (1 dozen)

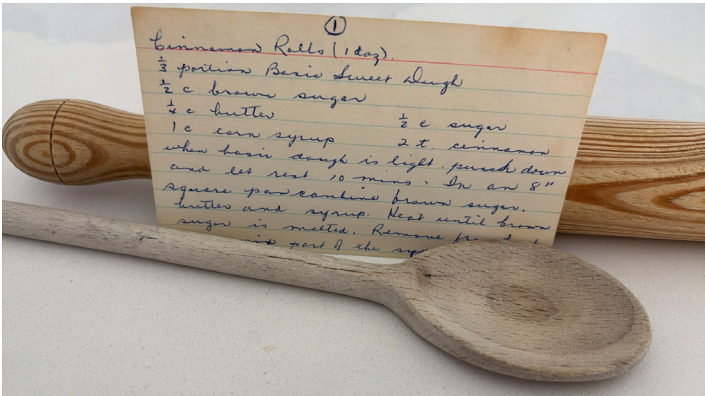

- 1/3 portion basic sweet dough
- 1 cup corn syrup
- 1/2 cup brown sugar
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup butter
- 2 teaspoons cinnamon

When basic dough is light, punch down and let rest 10 minutes. In an 8" square pan, combine brown sugar, butter and syrup. Heat until brown sugar is melted. Remove from heat and mix part of the syrup with sugar & cinnamon to make a paste.

rolls out onto a plate to cool. Icing optional!

My favourite part of this recipe was cleaning out the bottom of the pan after the cinnamon rolls were put on the plate. Four of us kids would fight over who got the warm melted brown sugar, butter, corn syrup mixture. Yum!!

Stay tuned over the next few issues for other concepts and let us know your thoughts. We'll keep trying new ideas until we find the perfect addition to The Wayback Times.

Roll dough out thinly into a rectangle and spread with the sugar paste. Roll up like a jelly roll and cut in 1/2" slices. Arrange slices in baking pan on top of remaining syrup and let rise for 30 minutes. Bake in a preheated 375° oven for 25 to 20 minutes. Immediately turn

Pictorial Advertising on Early Canadian Postcards

By Mike Smith

Three of the most important handbooks in my collectibles library were all authored by a passionate collector who inspired me to develop my own handbooks. This soft-spoken author and true gentleman was Dorval, Quebec's Wally Gutzman (1920–2010). His first labour of love, The Canadian Patriotic Post Card Handbook 1904–1914, was published by The Unitrade Press, Toronto in 1985. For me, this handbook was an absolute godsend. You see, the beauty of Canada's early patriotic postcards was the reason I was lured into postcard collecting in the first place. And until Gutzman rolled up his sleeves, there was an appalling lack of information for Canadian collectors when I got into the hobby in 1981.

Gutzman's next two handbooks, The Canadian Picture Post Card Catalogue 1988 and its second edition in 1992 had, among other things, sections devoted to Canadian postcards with colourful pictorial advertising. Some of this advertising was printed on early Canadian postal stationery, which were cards issued by the post office with imprinted stamps (see Figure 1). And some can be found on early Canadian private postcards. These would be cards the private sector was allowed to publish beginning on New Year's Day 1895. In this Wayback Times article then, I'm going to showcase some of the cards with pictorial advertising that caught my eye while helping Jack de la Vergne with the second edition of his lavishly-illustrated Graphic Art & Design on Advertising Postcards.

Another of the wonderful advertising cards earmarked for the second edition of de la Vergne's book is shown as Figure 2. Published by Toronto's Canada Biscuit Co. when no messages were allowed on a card's stamp side (i.e., the undivided-back era), this pre-1904 card is collectible on multiple levels. Patriotic postcard enthusiasts would definitely love the prominent maple leaf under the stamp. And if you look closely at the left side of the colourful biscuit tin, there are several more patriotic features – maple leaves, a moose and a Canada crest. Of course, those who collect advertising postcards and vintage tins would find this card hard to resist.

For the record, according to Google the Canada Biscuit Co. was not affiliated with Toronto's more famous industrial baker – Christie, Brown and Co. Nevertheless, both companies are known to collectors for their colourful advertising on postcards, other print media, and biscuit tins.

Although definitely not as colourful as the Canada Biscuit Co. example, the Gurney Foundry Co. advertising postcard shown as Figure 3 is still a great collectible. Founded in Hamilton as the E. & C. Gurney Company in 1843 by brothers Ernest and Charles Gurney, the firm expanded into Toronto in 1883. According to the Toronto Historical Association website, the Gurney Foundry Co. made stoves, hot-water and steam boilers, steam and hot-water radiators, stove pipes, castings, and ventilation equipment. The illustration on the card is of the firm's "Imperial Oxford" range. Today, this and other vintage Gurney stoves (and radiators) are prized Canadian antiques. So like the colourful tin on the Canada Biscuit Co. card, the stove on the Gurney Foundry card would definitely interest both postcard and antique collectors.

The pink advertising postcard shown as Figure 4 was published by Toronto's W. J. Gage & Co. This iconic Canadian printer-publisher started out as a little factory and store in Montréal in 1844. Its founders, brothers Robert and Adam Miller, created the R. & A. Miller partnership to manufacture and sell books and stationery. The firm's first major success was in the highly competitive school textbook market in 1846. It was also well known for publishing journals for the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Canada. For those who don't remember their high school history, the Province of Canada was comprised of Canada West (Ontario) and Canada East (Québec) and existed from 1841 until Confederation in 1867.

In 1860, Adam Miller opened a branch of R. & A. Miller in Toronto at 62 King Street East. The brothers' partnership was subsequently dissolved and in 1871 Adam Miller, now on his own, moved the business to larger premises at 11 Wellington Street West. William J. Gage joined Miller in 1874 and the firm became W. J. Gage & Co. in 1880. By 1884 the stationery and book business had grown so much that W. J. Gage & Co. had to build a new plant on Front Street. This is the plant illustrated on the Figure 4 postcard.

Let's Talk Comics

By Rob Lamberti

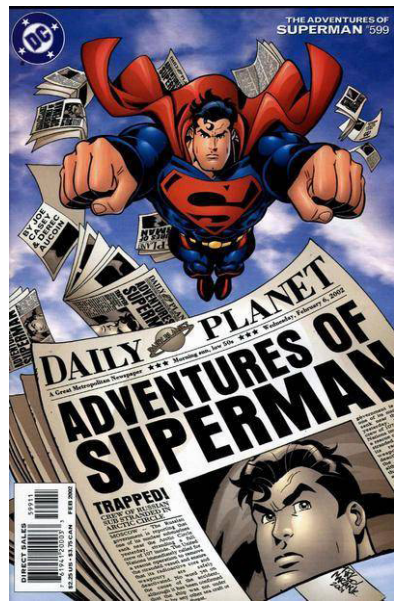

Journalism has always held an important role in comics since the early days of four-colour storytelling. Indeed, reporters and publishers held key positions in comic and pulp fiction, often depicted as crusading avengers.

Characters like Clark Kent, Jimmy Olsen, Lois Lane, Daily Bugle publisher J. Jonah Jameson, and Brett Reid, aka the Green Hornet and the publisher of the Daily Sentinel, bring news organizations into focus in comic stories. Often, when the law couldn't or wouldn't take on evil, the crusading reporter either became a masked vigilante or worked with them.

All of them are integral supporting characters in their respective comic series. Indeed, Jimmy Olsen and Lois Lane were spun off into separate series. Also, the Daily Bugle was the star of the six Marvel spin-offs, while the Daily Planet was the focus of three by DC.

Superman's Daily Planet was modelled after the then-named Toronto Daily Star. Co-creator Joe Shuster was a newspaper carrier for the Star and used the name for the early Action editions. The name changed to Daily Planet in 1940, first on the radio show and then in Action Comics.

EC Comics published Extra!, a five-issue series in 1955, the third title in its New Direction line.

The book, edited by Johnny Craig, followed the exploits of three reporters for the World Press.

Craig was the artist for the stories involving reporter Keith Michaels, while artist John Severin drew the art for the stories of reporter Steve Rampart. Artist Reed Crandall drew the stories depicting Geri Hamilton.

Craig also drew the five covers.

The New Direction comic titles, including Extra!, carried the Comics Code Authority seal of approval, much to the chagrin of publisher Bill Gaines.

The code was established in 1954 in an attempt by comic publishers to self-regulate, or censor, to prevent the government from coming after them. The attack on comics was spearheaded by the moral panic created by politicians, journalists and unscrupulous psychiatrists about juvenile delinquency.

The New Direction line lasted about a year. Few distributors wanted to handle EC titles after the U.S. Senate hearings on comic books prior to the implementation of the code. Pushed to the brink of closure, Gaines dropped the comics line to focus on Mad, which was magazine-size and not governed by the code.

The media, especially newspapers, were often used as a dramatic tool to tell the story. For example, The Watchmen used New Frontiersman as the far-right paper, while Nova Express was the woke weekly magazine. The New Frontiersman was the vehicle that supported masked vigilantes, while Nova Express questioned and challenged their role in society, creating the conflict central to the story of who watches the Watchmen?

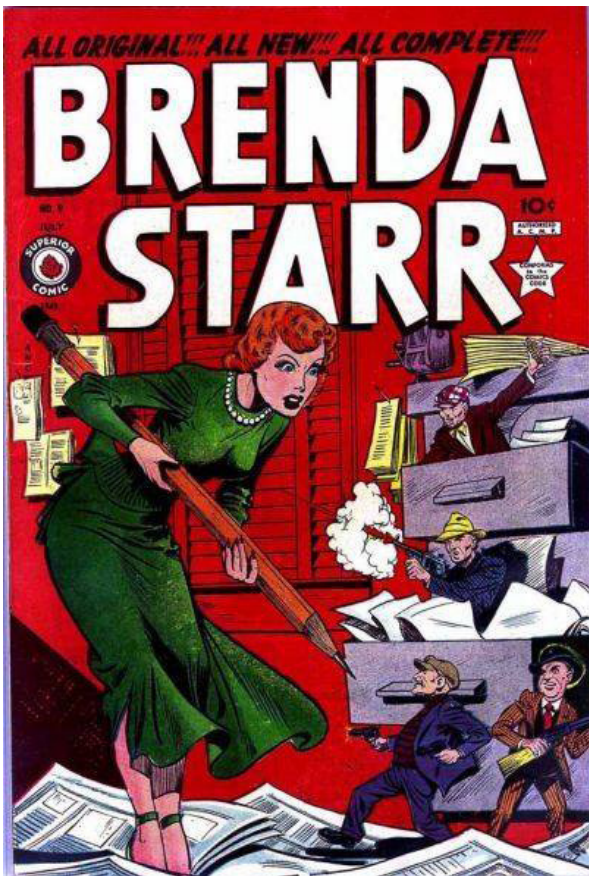

The Gotham Gazette's reporter Vicki Vale debuted in Batman 49, with a cover date of October 1948. She was also Bruce Wayne's on-again, off-again love interest. The character mimicked Lois Lane, spending much of her time trying to determine if Bruce Wayne and Batman were the same person.

Brenda Starr Reporter, who looks suspiciously like Rita Hayworth, worked for the Chicago newspaper The Flash in the comic strip.

The character was created by Dale Messick for the Chicago Tribune Syndicate in 1940. Her popularity peaked in the 1950s when the strip appeared in 250 newspapers. The strip lived on until 2011.

The character was published in comic book format in 1947 by Four Star Publications. Canada's Superior Publishing printed 10 issues when it carried the title in 1948 and '49. Charlton Comics then took the title on in 1955 for three issues, and Dell printed a single issue in 1963.

Lucas "Snapper" Carr appears as a television reporter in various DC comic books. The character, created by Gardner Fox and Mike Sekowsky in 1960, first appeared in The Brave and The Bold 28.

In the series Invasion!, Carr even gained superpowers.

Girl reporter Becky Burdock appears in the British comic Jack Staff by Dancing Elephant Press and, most recently, by Image Comics. She was also a vampire and a vampire hunter.

Spider Jerusalem was cast as a gonzo journalist in the comic book Transmetropolitan by DC imprints Helix and Vertigo. Spider is a journalist who takes on two corrupt and power-abusing U.S. presidents. The series ran for 60 issues between 1997 and 2002.

But not all journalists in comics were the good guys or gals. Ned Leeds was a Bugle reporter who first appeared in Amazing Spider-Man 18 and eventually married JJJ's secretary, Betty Brant. He was revealed to be the Hobgoblin in Amazing Spider-Man 289.

Other characters that dabbled in media include: Billy Batson in Captain Marvel, Jack Ryder, associated with WHAM News, as the Creeper, Vernon Fenwick, who was with Channel 6 News in Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Vic Sage in The Question, and, of course, the globe-trotting investigative reporter Tintin, who first appeared in 1929.
